he an economist is neculiar advice to give either in prosperity or adversity, since in the former case i would prove a hard task and in the latter a very necessary one. But, then, to be extravagant with success makes prosperity like unto a comet (threatening while it shines); therefore, to make three guiness do the work of five would be practising a frugality which would dispet all fears of reverses to the prosperous, and givhope to adversity, for in either case to learn the lesson how to spend less than you have is the sure road to permanent success. We aspection to the following quotations. They are low and are but an index t those to be found in our entire establishment, a visit to which will financially benefit all.
